What is Leptin?

It's been called the "obesity hormone" or "fat hormone" -- but also the "starvation hormone." When scientists discovered leptin in 1994, excitement arose about its potential as a blockbuster weight loss treatment. Leptin is not our obesity hormone. Leptin is our starvation hormone. Leptin is a protein that's made in the fat cells, circulates in the bloodstream, and goes to the brain. Leptin tells your brain that you have enough energy stored in your fat cells. But when people diet, they eat less and their fat cells lose some fat, which then decreases the amount of leptin produced.
